Stephen Brassington is rightly regarded as one of the leading practitioners in the field of Professional Discipline and was named Chambers and Partners Junior of the Year 2016. In Chambers UK 2021, Stephen continues his status as a star individual and is described as 'fearless' and 'brilliant' by the directory.

He is described, as "a class operator" by Chambers and Partners (2013) and The legal 500 comment he is "an extraordinarily effective advocate" (2014) and 'they should sell tickets to watch his cross-examination of experts.' (2016). He advises and acts primarily in cases arising from the healthcare, sports, education and legal industries.

Stephen also undertakes a significant amount of Health and Safety defence work, in particular advising and assisting in defence of criminal prosecutions and at Coronial Inquests.

His background is one of criminal defence work, where he has advised and represented clients facing allegations of murder, manslaughter (including gross negligence) and other non-fatal offences of violence, sexual offences, substantial drugs supply and importation, counterfeit pharmaceuticals and others. He also has extensive experience of cases of fraud, money laundering and other financial wrongdoing. Notable cases included defending in a conspiracy to kidnap Victoria Beckham, and in a £multi-million conspiracy to defraud Microsoft.

What others say:

"He is a fearless advocate, and a thorough and robust-cross examiner. He is a good fighter for his client. Really stands out as a star of the Bar." "An excellent advocate who has gravitas." "Simply brilliant, and he has a straight-talking and engaging style." – Chambers UK 2021

"Incredibly popular and rightly so. His cross-examinations are fantastic and play like something from

Professional Discipline

Stephen has, for the last ten years, practised almost exclusively in Professional Discipline and Regulation, representing professionals from a wide variety of industry sectors in cases brought by their regulatory bodies and in related proceedings in the criminal, civil and Coronial courts, and other tribunals.

For a number of years, Stephen was regularly instructed by the General Medical Council to present complex and lengthy cases before its disciplinary committees, and in the High Court, when it was said of him that he “has knowledge, drafting and presentational skills that are second to none at this level” (Chambers UK, 2009).

He now defends almost exclusively, and is in great demand by the principal indemnity providers who instruct him both directly and through their panel firms to represent professionals before their regulatory bodies (GMC, GDC, NMC and others), in Coroners’ Inquests, and associated proceedings (PCT, CESR/Specialist Register applications, Performers List Appeals, etc). He appears both at first instance and advises on statutory appeals and Judicial Review applications to the High Court. He is “praised for his high standard of client care, is firm without being unduly aggressive and does the job brilliantly with great humour and charm” (Chambers UK, 2011).

Stephen also undertakes significant cases associated with sports regulation. He was instructed by the Football Association as junior counsel in the prosecution of John Terry and also appeared in the appeal of physiotherapist Stephen Brennan in the Harlequins Rugby Football Club “Bloodgate” case. He is described as “a natural advocate, who will go the extra mile to provide a good service to his client” (Chambers UK, 2010).

He is also in particular demand to defend healthcare and other professionals involved in proceedings the criminal courts, particularly where there are concurrent or associated regulatory proceedings. Current cases include the defence of a consultant paediatrician accused of assaulting a patient’s sibling during a consultation.

Stephen was nominated by Chambers and Partners, publishers of market leading industry directories, as “Professional Discipline Junior of the Year” at the 2013 UK Bar Awards.

General Medical Council v Favier

Prosecution of a Consultant Anaesthetist for failure to declare financial interest in a product he recommended to patients suffering chronic intractable pain.

Inquests & Public Inquiries

Stephen's practice is principally concerned with the defence of healthcare professionals accused of misconduct and the defence of other professionals under investigation by the Health and Safety Executive before the criminal courts and at Coroners Inquests and is frequently instructed to represent Hospital Trusts at complex inquests.

Cases

Westminster Bridge Terror Attack

Stephen appeared Pro-Bono for victims of the Westminster Bridge attack at a pre-inquest hearing.

R (Parkinson) v HM Senior Coroner for Kent

Stephen represented the Trust who were an interested party in Judicial Review proceedings concerned with allegations of system failures, including an alleged Trust policy not to actively resuscitate elderly patients. The claim was dismissed and Stephen secured costs for the Trust.

Inquest touching upon the death of Katie Hamilton

Katie Hamilton died from hypoxic brain injury following self ligature whilst detained under s.2 Mental Health Act at the Becklin Centre in Leeds. Stephen represented the interests of Leeds and York Partnership Trust and Community Links Limited. Expert opinion obtained by HM Coroner contended that the Becklin centre failed to provide adequate supervision for Ms Hamilton whilst she was at significant risk of serious harm. The Coroner determined no neglect by the Trust.

Inquest touching upon the death of Craig Barratt

Craig Barratt was a 16 year old student studying for a Diploma in Animal Welfare who volunteered at Northamptonshire Animals Need Nurturing and Adoption ("NANNA") where the HSE had previously investigated rat infestations. Craig contracted and died from complications of Leptospirosis. Stephen represented the interests of NANNA.

Inquest touching upon the death of James Morris

James Morris died as a result of complications arising from heart valve replacement surgery. Stephen represented the interests of the cardiac surgeon who performed the surgery. It was suggested that the surgeon had conducted the wrong type of surgery and inadequately. The case involved complex and competing expert surgical evidence.
